

Colorado Thrives Coalition

Tackling climate change with good jobs, better health and strong communities

No matter where we come from, the color of our skin or how much we have in our wallets, we all deserve good jobs, to be healthy and for our families and communities to thrive.

Climate change is deeply impacting our communities; out-of-control wildfires, over pollution of our neighborhoods, specifically communities of color, are now normal. Why? Because corporations want to rake in profits by exploiting workers, degrading communities and poisoning the environment - and many politicians have given them the green light to do it.

Coloradans deserve clean air & water, good paying jobs, basic healthcare and affordable housing, especially communities of color, where corporations have focused their environmental abuse and neglect.

We have a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for Congress to put Coloradans first, not corporations. We can tackle climate change in a way that centers people, specifically communities of color.

Jobs

Good paying “green” jobs for working people to support their families

Health

Renewable energy that will help clean up the air we breathe and water we drink

Communities

Infrastructure, broadband and affordable, energy-efficient housing

During last year’s wildfires, Esmeralda gasped for air just walking from her living room to the kitchen in her Globeville home. Now that she’s moved to a more affordable home in Commerce City near the Suncor oil refinery and wildfires are raging again, she’s worried her condition will put her job at risk. Working with Colorado People’s Alliance, Esmeralda is lobbying for the THRIVE Act to enact the bold climate change action we need to improve the health and lives in her Latinx community.

Living on the Western Slope, Lili has a front-row seat to the ravages of climate change, from the raging wildfires in Rangely and Craig to local farmers and ranchers desperate for water that just isn’t there. Surrounded by neighbors and friends working in the fossil fuel industry, she is afraid they will be left behind and is determined to ensure that they get priority for good paying jobs in the new clean energy economy. Through her work with 350 Colorado, Lili is organizing to pass the THRIVE Act to prioritize good paying clean energy jobs to stop climate change.

Join us. Do your part to address climate change and economic inequality – contact your U.S. Senators and U.S. Representatives today!